Justification: grow more slow

Chlorophyll is strong green like in your target temperature and range that helps in the photosynthesis. Chlorophyll is a combination of chlorophyll a and b, which are the main pigments in plants. Chlorophyll a is the primary pigment in photosynthesis, and it is the one that gives plants their green color. Chlorophyll b is a secondary pigment that helps in the absorption of light energy and transfers it to chlorophyll a. The ratio of chlorophyll a to b is important for the efficiency of photosynthesis. In general, a higher ratio of chlorophyll a to b indicates a more efficient photosynthetic system. The ratio of chlorophyll a to b is also affected by environmental factors such as light intensity, temperature, and nutrient availability. For example, plants grown in high light intensity will have a higher ratio of chlorophyll a to b than plants grown in low light intensity. Similarly, plants grown in high temperatures will have a higher ratio of chlorophyll a to b than plants grown in low temperatures. Nutrient availability also plays a role in the ratio of chlorophyll a to b, with plants grown in high nutrient conditions having a higher ratio than plants grown in low nutrient conditions. The ratio of chlorophyll a to b is a useful indicator of plant health and photosynthetic efficiency, and it can be used to monitor the growth and development of plants under different environmental conditions.
