

Identifying the Mutation

Identify the following:

- Substitution mutation: the replacement of one nucleotide in a sequence. Substitution mutations can be categorized into silent, missense, and nonsense mutations based on the effect they have on the protein sequence. Silent mutations do not change the amino acid sequence, missense mutations change one amino acid, and nonsense mutations introduce a premature stop codon.
- Insertion mutation: the addition of one or more nucleotides into a DNA sequence.
- Deletion mutation: the removal of one or more nucleotides from a DNA sequence.
- Frameshift mutation: a mutation that shifts the reading frame of a gene, typically caused by insertions or deletions of nucleotides that are not multiples of three.
- Point mutation: a mutation that affects a single nucleotide in a DNA sequence.
- Indel mutation: a mutation that involves the insertion or deletion of one or more nucleotides.
- Repeat expansion: a mutation where a sequence of nucleotides is repeated multiple times.
- Truncation: a mutation that results in a shorter protein, often due to a premature stop codon.

mutations, and a strategy that involves identifying the type of mutation (e.g., silent, missense, nonsense, frameshift) and then determining the effect of the mutation on the protein sequence. For example, a silent mutation would not change the amino acid sequence, while a nonsense mutation would introduce a premature stop codon.
