Superheroes. Most often people see child's reality/fantasy constructions not what these young people seem to want to become. However, suggesting, for example, that the child really wants to be a superhero but that, when the parents find signs of this, they are putting enough obstacles in the way, and therefore the child is trying to find new solutions or else has feelings of power and other... (Kriegelmeier, 1998, p. 100). And, of course, the child is not the adult. The child is, in fact, a child, not an adult.
