

AP Biology - Chapter 5 Guided Reading Assignment

1. What is molecular biology and why is it important biology?
Molecular biology is the study of biological processes at the molecular level. It is a branch of biology that deals with the study of the structure and function of molecules, such as DNA, RNA, and proteins. It is important because it helps us understand the basic processes of life, such as how cells work and how they communicate with each other.
2. What does a scientist investigate with and what is the difference between a observing and measuring scientific phenomena?
A scientist investigates a problem or phenomenon by using a variety of techniques, such as observation, experimentation, and analysis. The difference between observing and measuring is that observing is simply watching something happen, while measuring involves using a tool or instrument to quantify something. For example, a scientist might observe that a plant is growing, but they would measure the height of the plant to determine how fast it is growing.
3. Describe the process and progress of cell fractionation.
Cell fractionation is the process of separating the components of a cell into different fractions. This is done by breaking the cell open and then separating the different parts of the cell based on their size, density, and other properties. The process of cell fractionation is important because it allows scientists to study the function of different parts of the cell and how they interact with each other.

4. Labeling peroxisomes with lectins - structure and function

5. What is a surface area to volume ratio and why is it important in cell biology?
The surface area to volume ratio is a measure of the relative surface area of a cell compared to its volume. It is important in cell biology because it affects the rate at which a cell can exchange materials with its environment. Cells with a high surface area to volume ratio can exchange materials more efficiently than cells with a low surface area to volume ratio. This is why small cells are more efficient than large cells.
