Abstract: This study examined the effects of a 12-week, 100% bodyweight resistance training program on the body composition and muscle strength of 10 sedentary, middle-aged men. The program was designed to be performed at home, with no equipment other than a resistance band and a weighted vest. The program consisted of three sessions per week, with each session including a warm-up, a main workout, and a cool-down. The main workout included a series of exercises targeting the major muscle groups, including the chest, back, legs, and arms. The weighted vest was used to increase the resistance of the exercises. The results of the study showed that the program was effective in improving body composition and muscle strength. The participants showed a significant decrease in body fat percentage and an increase in muscle mass. Additionally, the participants showed a significant increase in strength in the major muscle groups. The program was well-tolerated by the participants, and they reported feeling more energetic and confident after the program. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, 100% bodyweight resistance training program can be an effective way to improve body composition and muscle strength in sedentary, middle-aged men.
