

Themes of Social Studies 5: Individuals, Groups, and Institutions

Take a moment to think about where you live. Is it a city, or do you live in a rural area? Can you walk to your school or do you take a bus? What is the traffic like? Are there a lot of people living where you live? Do you have stores and businesses nearby, or do you have to travel long distances to get to a place to shop? Do you visit the library, churches, parks, hospitals, and community centers? Each of these places is where individuals go to learn, get medical care, exercise, shop, and socialize. You probably have not paid much attention to these places as they are so common and ordinary – part of your day!

We call an organization founded for a religious, educational, social, or similar purpose an institution. Institutions are how individuals and groups organize essential services we need to keep society functioning positively. For example, education services are organized by school systems and schools. Healthcare is provided by doctors and hospitals. Banks provide financial services while grocery stores are in business to sell food and other necessities. Churches, synagogues, mosques, and temples are where we go for religious services. All of these are examples of institutions that are organized by individuals or groups to provide different services we need.

Another institution you may have studied in Social Studies class is the government. The government provides all sorts of services that we take for granted. For example, the roads we drive on were built and are maintained by the government. If you attend school in a school building, nearly everything you see is paid for taxes collected by the government. The government touches almost everything you see or do during the day.

Institutions play an essential role in society. One way to study Social Studies is by identifying the types of institutions we rely upon to keep our community organized and functioning. We should know how they operate and who is in charge of them so that we can better understand how we, as individuals, can access them and work with them.
