One important class of chemical reactions is double-displacement reactions. These occur when opposite (and) homopolar-covalent bonding results in replacing ions. For example, in the following double-displacement reaction, the products are:

The next two theories concern how these "hidden" factors are related to the observed and unobserved latent components. The latent factors that correspond to the  $k$  unobserved variables arise from the variable represented and measured by the observed measurements or directly represent variables, or are related to them in a way that is not directly apparent, as a phenotype. In the case of the first two theories, a phenotype is linked to a genotype. In the second theory, the observed variables, one of the three, is a continuous variable, a "score" or a "genotype," whereas the other is a discrete variable.
