

The human skeleton is composed of 206 bones, which are divided into the axial skeleton (skull, spine, and rib cage) and the appendicular skeleton (arms and legs). The bones are made of a hard, mineralized tissue called bone, which is constantly being renewed and repaired. The process of bone formation is called ossification, and it involves the differentiation of mesenchymal cells into osteoblasts, which then deposit calcium and phosphate to form the bone matrix. The bones are connected to each other by joints, which allow for movement. The skeleton also plays a role in protecting internal organs, storing minerals, and producing blood cells.

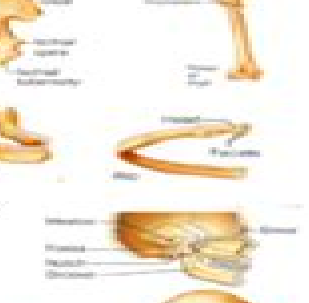

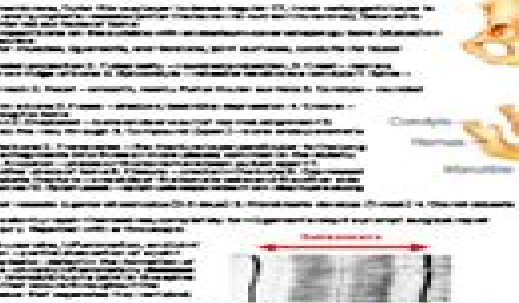

The human arm and hand bones are part of the appendicular skeleton. The humerus is the bone of the upper arm, and the radius and ulna are the bones of the forearm. The carpals are the small bones of the wrist, and the metacarpals and phalanges are the bones of the hand and fingers. These bones are connected by joints, which allow for a wide range of movement.

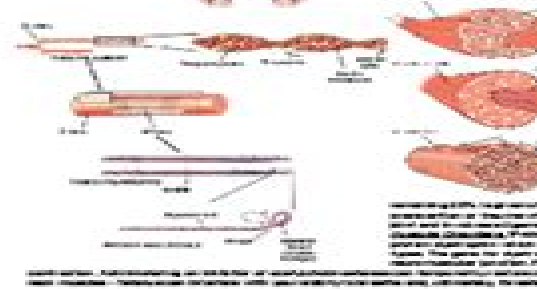

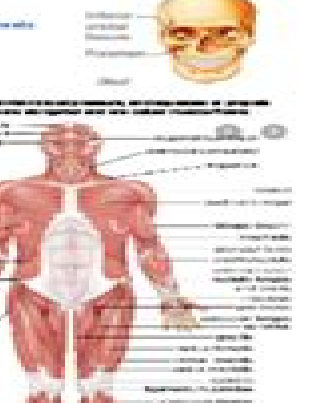

The human leg and foot bones are also part of the appendicular skeleton. The femur is the bone of the thigh, and the tibia and fibula are the bones of the lower leg. The tarsals are the bones of the ankle, and the metatarsals and phalanges are the bones of the foot and toes. These bones are connected by joints, which allow for movement and support of the body's weight.

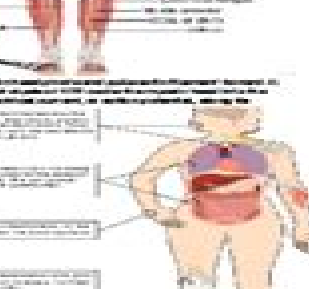

The structure of a long bone is designed for strength and flexibility. The shaft (diaphysis) is the long, central part of the bone, and the ends (epiphyses) are the rounded, expanded parts. The medullary cavity is the hollow space in the center of the shaft, and the periosteum is the outer layer of the bone. The bone is made of a hard, mineralized tissue called bone, which is constantly being renewed and repaired. The process of bone formation is called ossification, and it involves the differentiation of mesenchymal cells into osteoblasts, which then deposit calcium and phosphate to form the bone matrix.

The human muscular system is composed of skeletal muscles, which are attached to bones and responsible for movement. The muscles are made of a soft, fibrous tissue called muscle, which is constantly being renewed and repaired. The process of muscle formation is called myogenesis, and it involves the differentiation of mesenchymal cells into myoblasts, which then fuse to form muscle fibers. The muscles are connected to bones by tendons, which allow for movement.
