

A computer programming aptitude test has been developed for high school seniors. The test designers claim that scores on the test are independent of the type of school the student attends: rural, suburban, urban. A study involving a random sample of students from these types of institutions yielded the following contingency table.

- Copy the table into an excel worksheet.
- Use the AUTOSUM command to find the sums of each row and each column and the grand total.
- Make a table of expected values in the same worksheet.
- Use the CHITEST command to compute the P-value of the sample chi square value.
- Determine if type of school and test score are independent at the significance level of 5%.
- Print out the results of the test.
