

Title: Variation in population size

A - Explain the effect of density independent factors

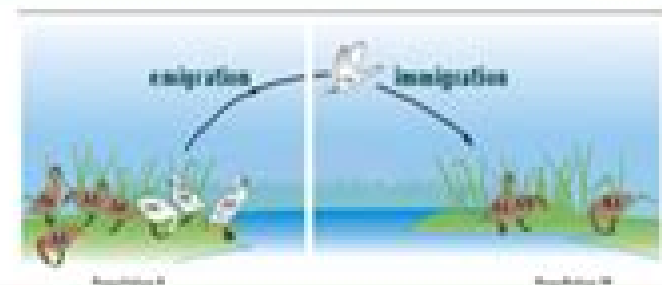

B - Determine the stages of a population growth curve

C - Describe why a logarithmic scale may be used over a time scale

Immigration: Movement of individuals into a area - increases the population size

Emigration: Movement of individuals away from an area decreases population size

Population growth curves

B - Determine the stages of a population growth curve

C - Describe why a logarithmic scale may be used over a time scale

Q - Why does the rate increase from slow to rapid?

Q - Why does the population become stable rather than continue to increase?

Population growth curves

B - Determine the stages of a population growth curve

C - Describe why a logarithmic scale may be used over a time scale

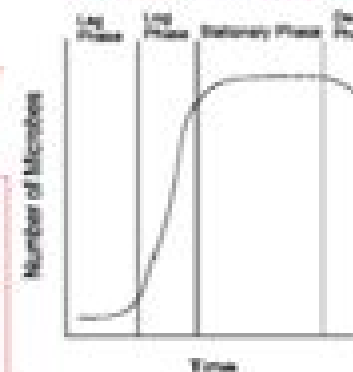

The growth curve still shows a similar pattern.

Q - Suggest why a bacterial population may result in a death phase

Mineral ions are consumed as population increases

If photosynthetic, bacteria at the top maybe prevent light reaching those at the bottom
