Tsarist Russia, 1855–1917: AS Unit 1 (pp. 18–19)

Andy Woodward

You can use this material alongside the AQA exam focus in this issue of 20TH CENTURY HISTORY Review (pp. 18–19) to help you revise this topic. The question that appeared on p. 18 focused on 1917 and the last section of Unit 1. Here, I consider questions concerning the earlier period.

What should you be trying to achieve?

(a) 12-mark question mark scheme

L4: Answers will be well-focused, identifying a range of specific explanations, backed by precise evidence and demonstrating good understanding of the connections and links between events/issues. Answers will, for the most part, be well-written and organised.

For a 12-mark question (for which there are only four levels), a student should attempt to identify at least three separate factors in response to the question asked ('a range'), developing each with 'explanation', and utilising specific knowledge ('precise evidence') in support. A conclusion will only be brief, emphasising any links between the factors above.

(b) 24-mark question mark scheme

L5: Answers will be well-focused and closely argued. The arguments will be supported by precisely selected evidence leading to a relevant conclusion/judgement, incorporating well-developed understanding of historical interpretations and debate. Answers will, for the most part, be carefully organised and fluently written, using appropriate vocabulary.

For a 24-mark question, a student must take a two-sided approach. They must show the 'debate' between competing historical interpretations, and will reach a meaningful conclusion ('a relevant judgement'). The answer must be 'well-focused' upon the question asked throughout. A logical approach would be to start with an introduction defining the question, give two developed points on each side of the argument and then a conclusion.

Planning questions

Question 1

(a) Explain why there was disappointment at the reforms of Alexander II (12 marks)

General advice

It is legitimate to answer this type of question by addressing the shortcomings of a different specific reform in each paragraph (e.g. education reforms, military reforms, emancipation of the serfs) but this
