

The American Civil War

by Frederick Douglass

General Sherman's March to the Sea

The American Civil War lasted from 1861 to 1865 and was the result of a long history of slavery between the Southern states and the Northern states. The major cause of the war was the issue of slavery. Slavery in the United States had been a part of the country since the first settlers arrived. Slavery was a part of the country's economy and society. The war was fought over the issue of whether slavery should be allowed to continue in the United States.

In the early to mid-1800s, large farms called plantations were the backbone of the Southern economy. Cotton, a strong material used often in everyday life all over the world, was one of the most important crops grown on the plantations. As a result, cotton plantations multiplied throughout the region. Since the South had become the main grower and exporter of cotton, the South grew a powerful economic force. Many people were required to work on plantations, and Southern plantation owners relied on slaves as their cheapest form of labor to work the fields. Slaves often worked in the fields especially during the hot summer months and at harvest time. The main reason for this was that slaves were the main source of labor for the plantations. Slaves were often kept in the fields of plantations, working the fields, or as a way to keep the slaves from leaving the plantations.
