

Marshall's Third Great Speech (1791), and American history presents a telling story about how Americans have seen war.

Q How did the Revolutionary War change Americans' views of the war's necessity and purpose?

The Revolutionary Revolutionary Congress was highly influential and approved the principle of self-determination, not only in the form of the new government but also in the form of the new government. The new government was not only a new government, but also a new government.
