

The American Civil War

by Frederick Douglass

General Sherman's March to the Sea

The American Civil War lasted from 1861 to 1865 and was the result of agreed-upon conflicting views between the Northern and Southern states over the issue of slavery. The major cause for the war was the fact that the Southern states wanted to keep slavery, while the Northern states wanted to abolish it. The war ended with the Union's victory, and slavery was abolished throughout the country.

In the early to mid-1800s, large farms called plantations were the backbone of the Southern economy. Cotton, a strong material used often in everyday life all over the world, was one of the most important crops grown on the plantations. As a result, cotton plantations multiplied throughout the region. Since the South had become the main grower and exporter of cotton, the North grew a powerful economic force. Many people were required to work on plantations, and Southern plantation owners relied on slaves as their cheapest form of labor to work the fields. Slaves often worked in the fields, especially during the summer months, and at a distance from the main house where the owners' families lived. They were given very little food and were required to live uncleanly in the plantation's yards. Some slaves were even forced inside the houses of plantation owners, allowing the owners to see a marriage in the children.
