

The Digestive System

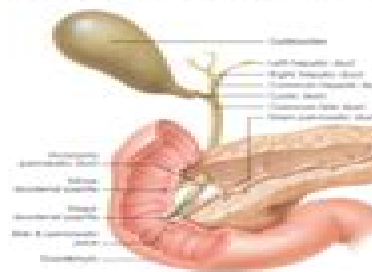

What is the digestive system?

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is a tract of organs that is responsible for digesting and absorbing nutrients from food. Food enters through the mouth, is broken down in the stomach, and then moves through the small intestine, where nutrients are absorbed. The digestive system also includes accessory organs that help in the process, such as the liver, pancreas, and gallbladder.

Liver, pancreas & gallbladder

After leaving the stomach, digested material enters the duodenum, the first part of the small intestine, where it is mixed with bile secreted by the liver. The liver is a large organ in the upper right of the abdomen. It produces bile, which is stored in the gallbladder. Bile then moves through the pancreas, which produces pancreatic juice, and enters the duodenum.

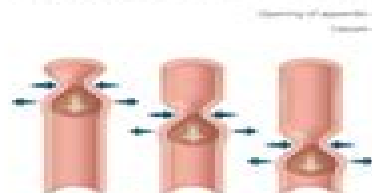

Layers of large intestine

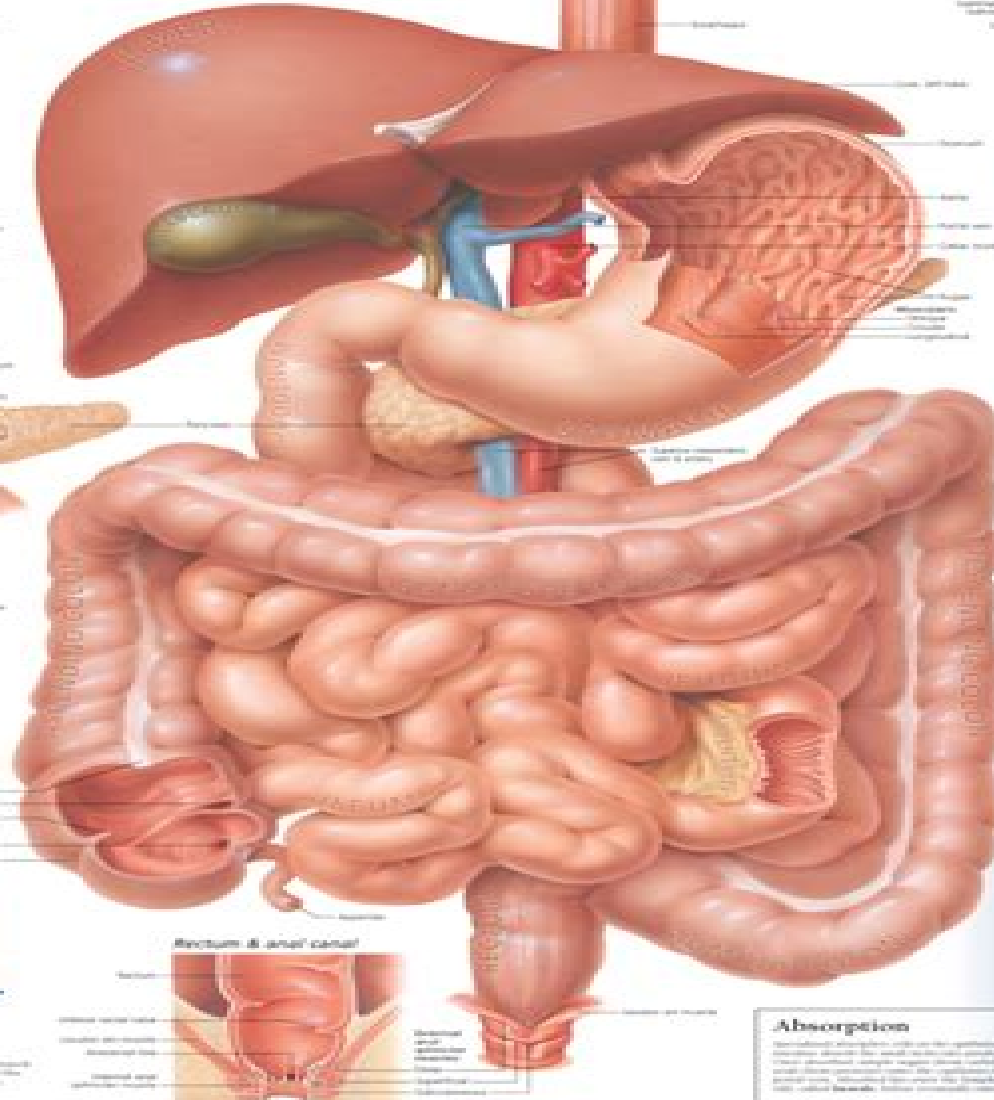

Large intestine

The large intestine consists of the cecum, the appendix, the ascending colon, the transverse colon, the descending colon, and the sigmoid colon. It is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the remaining indigestible food matter, thereby forming feces.

Peristaltic action

Food material is pushed through the digestive system by a series of powerful muscular contractions called peristalsis. These contractions move the material forward and the wave which, when it moves, the material is pushed forward.

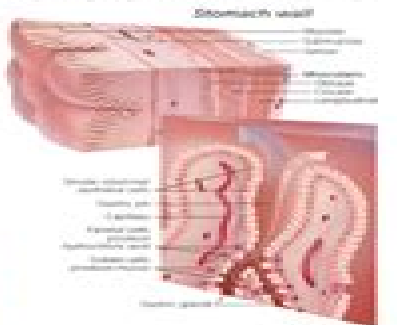

The mouth & salivary glands

Chewing the food breaks it into smaller pieces, making it easier to swallow. Saliva, secreted by the salivary glands, helps in the digestion of food. It contains the enzyme amylase, which breaks down starch into sugar. Saliva also helps in the lubrication of the food, making it easier to swallow.

The stomach

The stomach is a large, muscular organ that is responsible for the digestion of food. It is located in the upper left of the abdomen. Food enters the stomach through the esophagus and is mixed with gastric juice, which contains the enzyme pepsin. The stomach wall has three layers: the mucosa, the submucosa, and the muscularis.

Small intestine

The small intestine is a long, coiled organ that is responsible for the digestion of food. It is located in the central part of the abdomen. Food enters the small intestine through the duodenum and is mixed with pancreatic juice and bile. The small intestine has three parts: the duodenum, the jejunum, and the ileum.

Absorption

The small intestine is responsible for the absorption of nutrients from the food. The villi, which are small finger-like projections, increase the surface area of the intestine, allowing for the absorption of nutrients. The nutrients are then transported to the liver through the portal vein.
