“It was impossible to do alone but it felt like the two of us were together in the physical experience of painting it ourselves among other factors. Mark, who took the role of an impromptu curator in Against the Wall, thought the work gave the room a feeling of being put together and broken apart as well as the idea of the film,” says Lee. “What worked for us was a look that shows and hides what we want and how to think about the photograph of a house. We had lots of conversations about looking really hard at looking at the structure of the house.”
