

E3 ENTERTAINMENT CUBE

Dozens of new games previewed — our report from the Electronic Entertainment Expo

If you've never been to a really big trade show like the Electronic Entertainment Expo, nothing can prepare you for it. A dozen viewings of Kubrick's 2001, backed by the best hallucinogenics money can buy, couldn't prepare you for the sensory overload. The finest sneakers known to man — so light and airy even Ray Bradbury on his best day couldn't describe them, and lined with insoles Dr. Scholl never imagined in his wildest dreams — couldn't prepare your feet for the pain.

See, that's what a trade show really is. You spend nine hours a day, walking and standing (mostly walking) on hard concrete floors veiled by only the thinnest indoor-outdoor carpeting. You meet an endless succession of weary marketing people and game producers, and you listen as they recite the litany of their products' innovative features. Occasionally, you meet someone you've gone drinking with at previous shows, and you have an actual conversation — but mostly you just smile and nod in the appropriate places. You load your briefcase, gym bag or backpack down with sell-sheets, CD-ROMs, floppies, and business cards. Then, at the end of the day, you try to sort it all out. What was the name of that sharp-looking space combat sim we saw this morning? Or was that yesterday morning? And, come to think of it, was it a space game or a racing game?

Thank God for press kits.

By the end of the first day, you're simply hoping to see something — anything — that could make this death-march worthwhile. Something that looks interesting, innovative, or just plain fun. And, fortunately, there was a lot of that to see at E3. That's because this was the first show ever dedicated to our industry alone, the first show where computer gaming wasn't treated like a red-headed stepchild, relegated to a corner of the exhibition hall behind the VCRs, cell phones and subwoofers. So virtually everyone in the industry was there, from the biggest multi-label publishers to the newest two-game startup companies. And so was the mainstream media, from CNN to NBC to Daily Variety. It was glorious.

As is true of most shows, though, there was plenty on display at E3 that we've already told you about, a few companies we just didn't have time to talk to, and some products that simply weren't worth covering. You won't find that stuff here. This is our list of the most important new products of the show...

ACTIVISION

The biggest news at the Activision booth was the long-awaited — and long-delayed — MechWarrior II, the robot-combat game based on FASA's BattleTech roleplaying universe (for a more detailed report on MWII, check out the Eyewitness section in our June issue). This sequel to one of Activision's most successful titles ever is looking very sharp, and it should be sitting on store shelves as you read this.

Veteran gamers will be just as excited about Pitfall: The Mayan Adventure. In this sequel to the classic Atari 2600 cartridge, Pitfall Harry's son braves the wilds of a Mayan jungle to rescue his father from an evil warrior. The Mayan Adventure will be a Windows 95 game, and it should quiet anyone who's still skeptical about the new operating system's gaming capabilities. It's set to hit the stores in September.

BETHESDA

At the Bethesda booth, a game called The 10th Planet was the center of attention. This space-combat sim is being developed in cooperation with Centropolis Entertainment, creators of science fiction films like Universal Soldier, StarGate, and the upcoming Fox production, Independence Day. Its state-of-the-art graphics are made ultra-realistic by some truly remarkable lighting effects. Watch for this one in the first quarter of next year.

Around the end of the year, Bethesda will release X-CAR: Experimental Racing, a near-future driving game that lets gamers design and test their own high-tech automobiles. X-CAR will feature 3D, texture-mapped graphics at SVGA resolutions up to 640x480.

Bethesda's sports line will expand with PBA Bowling. This official computer game of the Professional Bowlers Association will feature a painstakingly realistic physics model, digitized players, and full-motion video. No word yet on whether or not you'll get to break for virtual beers after the fifth frame. PBA Bowling is slated for the third quarter of 1995, so it may be available as you read this.

Also very close to release as we go to press are Daggerfall, the sequel to Bethes-
