

Abstract 101.16: Specialized and Generalized Functions in the Brain

The localization of functions in the brain is a central issue in neuroscience. This talk reviews the evidence for specialized and generalized functions in the brain, focusing on the role of the brain in language, memory, and emotion. The talk will discuss the evidence for specialized functions in the brain, such as the role of the left hemisphere in language, and the evidence for generalized functions in the brain, such as the role of the right hemisphere in emotion. The talk will also discuss the implications of these findings for our understanding of the brain and for the treatment of brain disorders.
