Improving Water Governance in Kathmandu: Insights from Systems Thinking and Behavioural Science Dale Whittington ,Xun Wu,2020-04-15 The global water and sanitation community is currently wrestling with the policy implications of two important realizations The first is that it is quite possible for cities to actually run out of water for the piped network to run dry The second is that in many locations basic water and sanitation interventions do not result in the large public health improvements that many water and sanitation professionals had hoped As water and sanitation professionals work out the implications of these two realizations on policy and planning for water and sanitation improvements in the Global South they will require an in depth knowledge of local housing water and sanitation conditions as well as a nuanced understanding of how households prioritize improvements in housing water and sanitation The chapters in this book about Kathmandu illustrate the types of analyses of local conditions that are needed Kathmandu holds many lessons for the global community about households responses to water scarcity and the management of water and sanitation services in periods of rapid urbanization and climate change In Focus a book series that showcases the latest accomplishments in water research Each book focuses on a specialist area with papers from top experts in the field It aims to be a vehicle for in depth understanding and inspire further conversations in the secto

Systems Thinking Cliff Whitcomb,Heidi Davidz,2021-01-20 This Systems Thinking Special Issue contains 12 papers on the nature of systems thinking as it applies to systems engineering systems science system dynamics and related fields Systems thinking can be broadly considered the activity of thinking applied in a systems context forming a basis for fundamental approaches to several systems disciplines including systems engineering systems science and system dynamics Although these are somewhat distinct fields they are bound by common approaches in regard to systems Whereas systems engineering seeks to apply a multidisciplinary holistic approach to the development of systems systems science seeks to understand the basics related to systems of all kinds from natural to man made and system dynamics seeks to understand system structures in order to influence its dynamics Man made systems have become more ubiquitous and complex The study of systems both natural and engineered presents new challenges and opportunities to understand emergent dynamic behaviors that inform the process of sense making based on systems thinking
