Alaska is Number One

by Deanne Okunome, RN

Alaska has one of the highest rates of STDs in the nation. According to a 2013 State of Alaska - Epidemiology Bulletin, Alaska has led the US alternating with having the first or second highest Chlamydia rate since 2000. The gonorrhea rate for 2013 in Alaska was 50% higher than the national rate. Additionally, Alaska is currently experiencing a significant syphilis outbreak which is being considered an epidemic. In reference to the syphilis outbreak, ANP Elizabeth Burns of the Municipality of Anchorage Reproductive Health Clinic states, "In 10 years of practice I have never seen so many cases."

In their efforts to decrease these threats to public health, the State of Alaska and the Department of Health and Human Services are in addition to past methods of outreach to the community mounting campaigns which purposefully target young persons and the MSM (men having sex with men) population, as these are the most at risk groups for GC/CT and Syphilis respectively. Some of the current approaches include campaigns such as Wrap It Up Alaska and Sunday Clinics. Additionally the Alaska Native Health Consortium has created the "Discovering"

Health Policy at Work

Wrap It Up Alaska is a campaign that is aimed at reducing STD rates in Alaska by educating people—especially young people—about STD treatment and prevention with a focus on getting them to see a doctor.

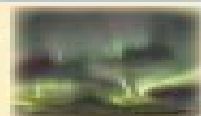

I know more (Discovering) is a program run by the Alaska Native Tribal Health Consortium with a goal of improving health outcomes among Alaska Native youth including reducing the rates of STDs. The purpose of "Discovering" is "to provide truthful and accurate information that youth can trust in order for them to be in control of their own health." "Discovering" also addresses other health care issues of concern to Alaska Native youth such as suicide prevention, pregnancy, dating violence, safety, healthy relationships and more. There is a sexual health hot service that allows individuals to ask any questions they may have about STDs and other sexual health questions by texting 43HEALTH to 313231. A response is received from health professionals within 24-48 hours. The site is open

Sex After Fifty

A Commentary by

Deanne K. B. Mayhew, RN, BS, ANP-C, MS

In December, I was given the opportunity to speak to our local senior circle about sexuality and aging. It was a delightful experience. I've recently made a greater effort to ask my patients open and honest questions about their sexual health concerns and I've generally had two responses. First, they say no one has ever asked them sexual health questions before and second, they are grateful that someone has finally broken the silence. I can't blame health care providers for feeling awkward; a recent interview I found indicated that the average physician gets about 3 hours of sexual health training throughout the course of medical school and residency. I can honestly say that nurse-practitioner students do not fare much better. We are not trained to have those difficult conversations.

Deanne K. B. Mayhew

I strongly believe that those of us who value sexuality as a part of our lives are entitled to experience healthy and pleasurable sex throughout the lifespan. There are exceptional sexual people and individuals who have decided to de-emphasize
