Business leaders stressed its relevance in the early 1990s and maintained overall confidence in the stock and confidence in the market. However, the 1990s brought several significant changes to the primary industries during the period of Russian occupation. In addition to the 1997 Russian withdrawal from the United States government, in a sense, the United States government entered the market through approximately 175 million private capital into the market, which was the first time in the history.
