Deflection summit finds police want treatment for offenders

Last month, the first-ever national deflection summit was held in Alexandria, Virginia, where experts from criminal justice, behavioral health and public policy convened to come up with strategies aimed at diverting, or deflecting, low-level drug offenders away from the justice system into treatment, before arrest. Also called prebooking diversion, deflection can help get people into treatment instead of incarceration. The two-day summit was sponsored by the International Association of Chiefs of Police (IACP).

Perhaps the best-known examples of "deflection" are the Police Assisted Addiction and Recovery Initiative (PAARI), which started in the Gloucester, Massachusetts, police department and now has many member police departments across the country, and Law Enforcement Assisted Diversion (LEAD), based in Seattle, Washington.

While law enforcement is eager to find treatment solutions instead of arrest and incarceration, the treatment field isn't making it easy, said Jac A. Charlier, national director for

Bottom Line...

Police and sheriffs want to "deflect" people who need treatment from the criminal justice system, but treatment needs to be there to receive them.

Analysis sees malpractice liability as overlooked in medical marijuana states

It is an untapped frontier of case law that likely won't go untested much longer, now that more than half of the states allow for some medical uses of marijuana. Are physicians being exposed to significant malpractice liability when certifying patients to receive marijuana for medical purposes?

An attorney and psychologist who is one of the nation's most prominent drug court researchers believes potential physician liability issues have been wrongly overlooked. Even if a doctor follows the language in a state's medical marijuana statute to the letter, that does not mean he/she is immune from a malpractice lawsuit if the patient ultimately suffers an adverse outcome related to the treatment.

"Physicians are sued all the time for doing things that are legal," Douglas B. Marlowe, J.D., Ph.D., told ADWEEK. Understanding the extent of potential liability requires a closer look at how each state's laws address standards of medical care, Marlowe said. "I realize that there is no one answer," he said.

Bottom Line...

An attorney and drug court researcher points out that even if a physician certifying patients to receive medical marijuana follows every procedure in a marijuana statute, the possibility of being sued for malpractice rests on completely separate criteria.

Alcoholism And Drug Abuse Weekly Report Gives Colleagues Failing:

Research Advances in Alcohol and Drug Problems Howard Cappell, 2013-11-11 This the ninth volume in the series appears some 13 years after the first Like most of its predecessors Volume 9 is deliberately eclectic covering a range of topics that the editors think worthy of inclusion Some of the chapters such as the review of the literature on benzodiazepines represent areas that have received relatively little attention in previous volumes largely because the literature has not previously been ripe for review Others represent literatures that have been reviewed in the past but which continue to advance in sufficient measure that their ripening never ceases Shepard Siegel's contribution represents a relative rarity in previous volumes a chapter not laden with a consideration of current empirical work but a reflective essay designed to stir thought with some provocative ideas The editors trust that readers will continue to find Research Advances to be an important repository of knowledge in the alcohol and drug fields
