

The Digestive System

What is the digestive system?

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is a tract of organs that is responsible for digesting and absorbing nutrients from food. Food enters through the mouth, is broken down in the stomach, and then moves through the small intestine, where nutrients are absorbed. The digestive system also includes accessory organs that help in the process, such as the liver, pancreas, and gallbladder.

Liver, pancreas & gallbladder

After leaving the stomach, digested material enters the duodenum, the first part of the small intestine, which is connected to the stomach by the duodenal papilla. The liver, pancreas, and gallbladder are located in the abdominal cavity. The liver is the largest organ in the body and is responsible for producing bile, which is stored in the gallbladder. The pancreas is a gland that produces pancreatic juice, which is released into the small intestine. The gallbladder is a small sac that stores bile.

Layers of large intestine

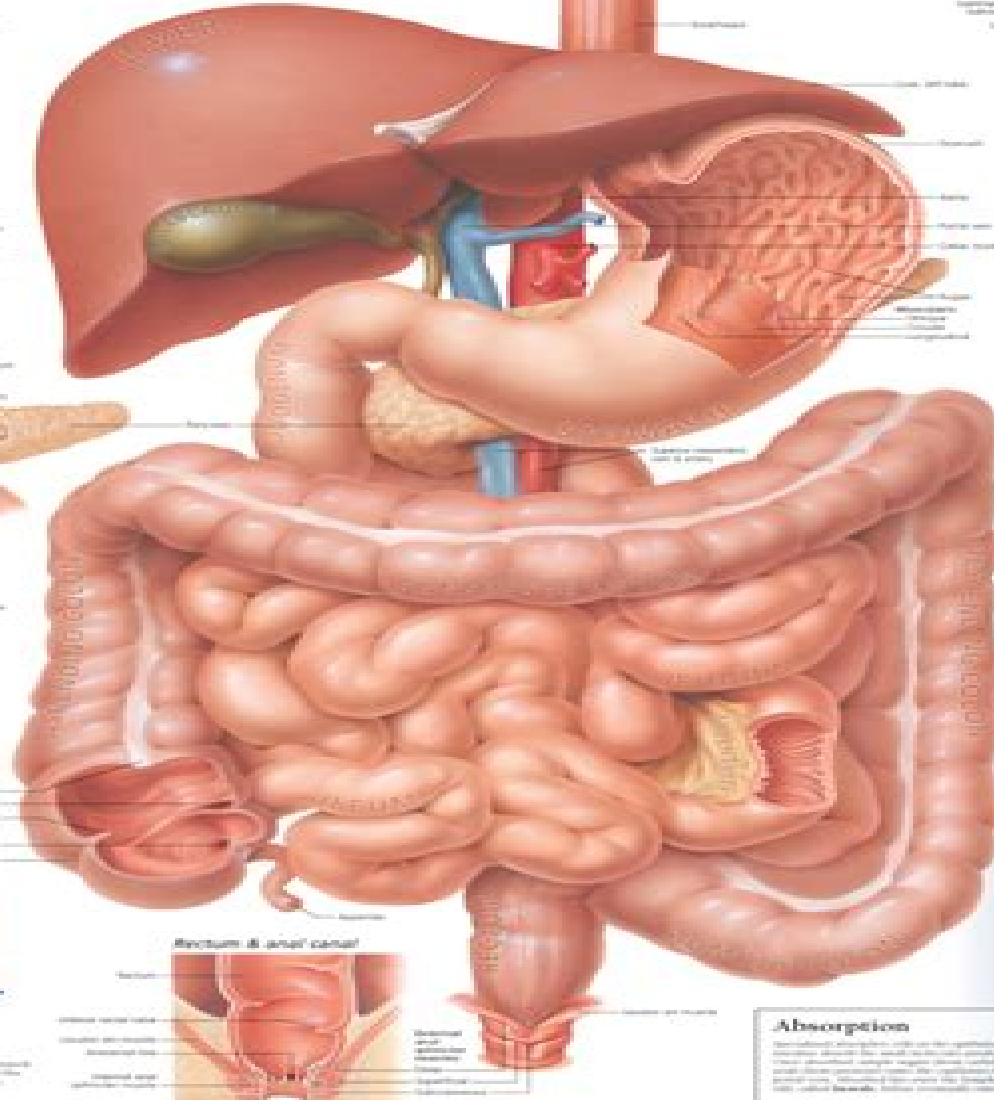

Large intestine

The large intestine consists of the cecum, the ascending colon, the transverse colon, the descending colon, the sigmoid colon, and the rectum. The large intestine is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the undigested food and for forming and storing feces.

Peristaltic action

Food material is pushed through the digestive system by a series of powerful, rhythmic contractions called peristalsis. These contractions are initiated by the nervous system and the digestive tract itself. The digestive tract is a tube, and the food moves through it in a one-way direction.

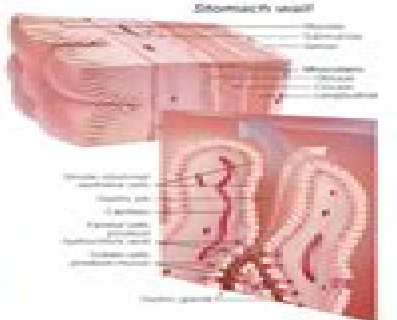

The mouth & salivary glands

Chewing, the mechanical action of the food, is called mastication. The tongue is a muscular organ that is used for mastication. The salivary glands are located in the mouth and produce saliva, which is used for mastication and for the digestion of food.

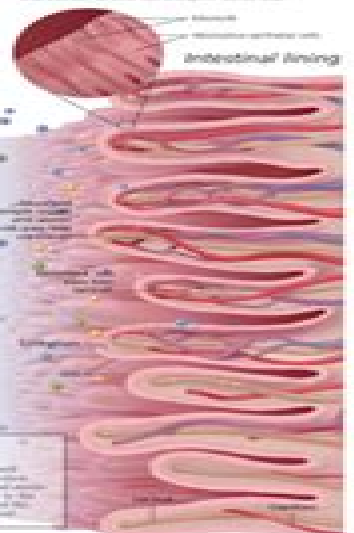

The stomach

The stomach is a muscular organ that is responsible for the digestion of food. It is located in the abdominal cavity and is connected to the esophagus and the small intestine. The stomach wall is composed of several layers of muscle and is lined with a mucous membrane.

Small intestine

The small intestine is a long, coiled tube that is responsible for the digestion of food. It is located in the abdominal cavity and is connected to the stomach and the large intestine. The small intestine is divided into three parts: the duodenum, the jejunum, and the ileum.

Absorption

The process of absorption is the process by which the nutrients from the food are taken up by the body. The nutrients are absorbed through the walls of the small intestine and are then transported to the liver and the rest of the body.
