

The Digestive System

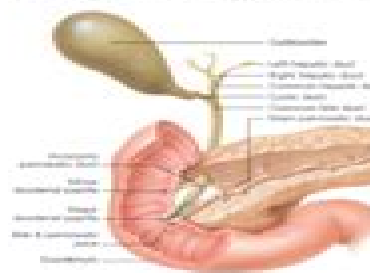

What is the digestive system?

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is a tract of organs that is responsible for digesting and absorbing nutrients from food. Food is broken down mechanically in the mouth, is digested through a series of chemical reactions, and absorbed into the bloodstream. The nutrients are then used by the body for energy and growth. The digestive system also plays a role in the elimination of waste from the body.

Liver, pancreas & gallbladder

Just below the stomach, organs known as the liver, pancreas, and gallbladder are located. The liver is the largest organ in the body, and it is responsible for producing bile, a substance that is used to break down fats in the small intestine. The pancreas is a small organ that is located behind the stomach. It is responsible for producing pancreatic juice, a substance that is used to break down carbohydrates, proteins, and fats in the small intestine. The gallbladder is a small sac-like organ that is located below the liver. It is responsible for storing and concentrating bile.

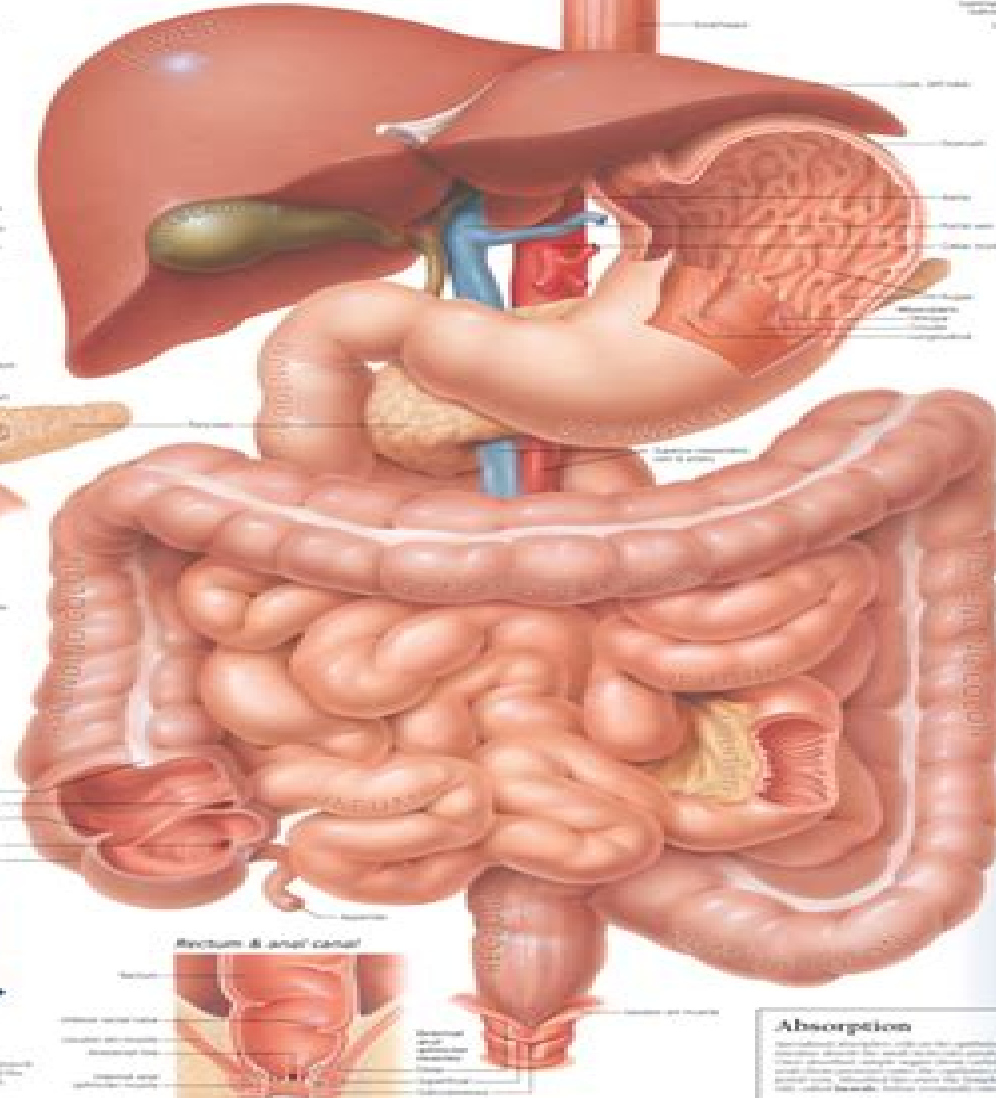

Large intestine
The large intestine is the final part of the digestive system. It is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the remaining indigestible food matter. The large intestine is divided into three main parts: the cecum, the colon, and the rectum. The cecum is a large sac-like structure that is located at the beginning of the large intestine. The colon is a long, tube-like structure that is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes. The rectum is a short, tube-like structure that is responsible for storing feces before it is eliminated from the body.

Peristaltic action

Food is moved through the digestive system by a series of waves of contraction called peristalsis. These waves are caused by the rhythmic contractions of the muscles in the digestive tract. The peristaltic action is responsible for moving food from the mouth to the stomach, and from the stomach to the small intestine, and from the small intestine to the large intestine.

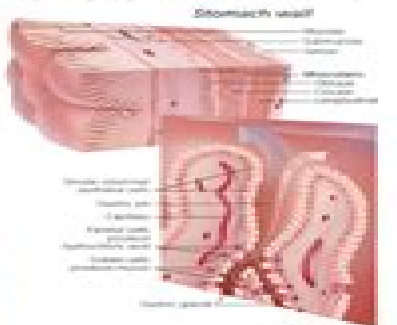

The mouth & salivary glands

Chewing the food breaks it into smaller pieces, making it easier to swallow. Saliva, which is produced by the salivary glands, contains the enzyme amylase, which begins the digestion of carbohydrates. Saliva also contains mucin, a substance that helps to lubricate the food and the lining of the mouth. The salivary glands are located in the mouth and are responsible for producing and secreting saliva.

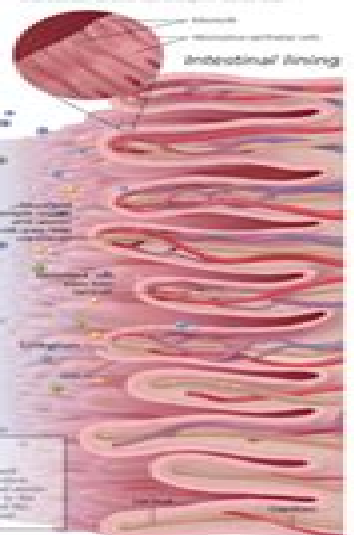

The stomach

The stomach is a large, muscular organ that is responsible for storing and mixing food with gastric juice. The stomach is divided into two main parts: the cardiac and the pyloric. The cardiac is the upper part of the stomach, and it is responsible for receiving food from the esophagus. The pyloric is the lower part of the stomach, and it is responsible for emptying the stomach into the small intestine. The stomach wall is composed of several layers of muscle, which contract to mix food with gastric juice.

Small intestine

The small intestine is a long, coiled tube that is responsible for the majority of the digestion and absorption of nutrients. It is divided into three parts: the duodenum, the jejunum, and the ileum. The duodenum is the first part of the small intestine, and it is responsible for receiving chyme from the stomach. The jejunum is the middle part of the small intestine, and it is responsible for the majority of the digestion and absorption of nutrients. The ileum is the last part of the small intestine, and it is responsible for absorbing bile salts and vitamin B12.

Absorption

The nutrients that are absorbed in the small intestine are transported to the liver by the portal vein. The liver is responsible for processing these nutrients and for storing them for use by the body. The nutrients that are not absorbed in the small intestine are eliminated from the body in the feces.
