Rhetorical Analysis Essay

Many people find themselves talking to or about someone in a condescending manner, tearing down their opinions, quickly rebutting that they are wrong. Walter Lippman argues that this a positive practice. In Lippmann's excerpt from "The Indispensable Opposition", he argues that freedoms, most importantly freedom of speech, are necessary for a civilized society as it opens minds to new opinions which, in turn, improves society's opinions.

In the middle of Lippmann's excerpt, he explains to his audience that freedom of speech is necessary as diverse opinions come together with a multitude of ideas that, in turn, allow recognition of other ideals and beliefs while referring to the constitution as evidence. He says "... as a matter of historic fact, there is a much stronger foundation for the great constitutional right of freedom of speech, and as a matter of practical human experience there is a much more compelling reason for cultivating the habits of free men." The stated reference to the constitution was used as an appeal to the audience's ethos and to prove his knowledge to the reader, which in turn, enhanced his credibility. This was shown in the dialect he used in his quote along with his choice of diction. Due to this, the audience will more likely be open to accept his viewpoint and argument. Ethos was similarly used earlier in the passage when Lippmann quoted Voltaire: "It is all very well to say with Voltaire, 'I wholly disapprove of what you say, but will defend to the death your right to say it...'"'. The author used this quotation to express his knowledge of freedom of speech by quoting famous philosophers to support his position. He also expresses the downside of Voltaire's quote saying that even though men are given the power to speak out, they will not defend this right for others. This allowed the audience to build a trustful relationship with the author in which they now have confidence in his knowledge and view of the topic.

The closing of the excerpt uses in depth rhetorical examples to argue that having arguments and differing opinions is beneficial to society. The author uses a humorous tone stating that tolerating the opinions of opponents is like "...a howling baby next door..." or putting up with "the blasts from our neighbor's radio." The satirical tone used in the passage is attempting to make the audience aware of how they tolerate opinions. He believes it is not right to treat ones' opinions as you would treat blasting music or a crying baby and as a society we should have more respect for opinions.

Walter Lippman strongly encourages society to have a higher toleration for opinions as they are necessary for a civilized society. He believes that toleration is something everyone can learn, and it is a vital tool. Therefore, next time your dog is barking, or your little sister is crying, don't think of how you felt listening to someone's opinion but instead try to practice toleration.
