Chapter 7: Inference for Quantitative Data

Learning Objectives: Given an inference problem, identify the appropriate procedure. 13 principles of inference

1. Inference is a statistical procedure used to make conclusions about a population based on a sample. It is based on the idea that samples are representative of the population and that the sample mean is a good estimate of the population mean. The procedure used depends on the type of data and the question being asked.

1.1. In a distribution, the mean is the average value of the data. It is calculated by adding all the values and dividing by the number of values.

1.2. The standard deviation is a measure of the spread of the data. It is calculated by taking the square root of the variance. The variance is the average of the squared differences between each data point and the mean.

1.3. A normal distribution is a bell-shaped curve that is symmetric around the mean. It is the most common type of distribution.

1.4. A normal distribution is a bell-shaped curve that is symmetric around the mean. It is the most common type of distribution.
