eight studies which examined children's national identifications and national attitudes. Data were collected from 725 7 and 11 year old children living in countries that have or have not experienced violence or war in the recent past. Twelve national groups participated in the studies including Jewish and Arab children Israel, Bosniak and Serbian children Bosnia, Catholic and Protestant children Northern Ireland, Greek Cypriot and Turkish Cypriot children Cyprus, Basque and Spanish children the Basque Country and Dutch and English children The Netherlands and England. The studies examined whether differences in the structure and content of national identity and attitudes result not only from processes of knowledge acquisition but also from cohort and context effects. Developmental and gender differences within each national group and differences between national groups are explored in terms of the cultural heritage of the particular group to which the children belong and the patterns of historical and contemporary relationships that exist between their own group and the various outgroups towards which their attitudes were assessed. Findings show that the development of national identifications and national attitudes exhibit considerable cross national variation as a function of the specific socio historical contexts within which children develop. These studies considered together indicate the need for developmental theorising in this area to avoid simplistic conclusions based upon data collected within just one specific location. The adoption of a broader cross national comparative perspective is required when attempting to address questions concerning how children's national identifications and attitudes develop within real world settings.

Children and the Law Katherine Hunt Federle, 2012-11-16. The study and practice of juvenile law is inherently interdisciplinary; a successful practitioner must understand not only the legal implications in the field but also have a solid grounding in child psychology, child development, neuroscience, sociology, criminology and social work. The best child advocates in the law have a firm familiarity with and understanding of the value these other disciplines provide. Children and the Law is a unique coursebook that will revolutionize the way students learn and apply juvenile law. By incorporating the interdisciplinary topics necessary to understand the best practices in child law, author Katherine Federle has carefully selected a vast array of articles, studies, research cases and statutes that allow students to best understand the law and also help bridge the divide between theory and practice. The book is separated into four main sections: Children and Crime, Children and Protection, Children and Restraints on Freedom, and Children and Decision Making. Each section in Children and the Law also includes a series of questions, exercises and problems that encourage students to critically examine legal doctrine and policy in light of available scientific and socio scientific scholarship.
