

The Digestive System

What is the digestive system?

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is a tract of organs that is responsible for digesting and absorbing nutrients from food. Food enters through the mouth, is broken down in the stomach, and then moves through the small intestine, where nutrients are absorbed. The digestive system also includes accessory organs that help in the process, such as the liver, pancreas, and gallbladder.

Liver, pancreas & gallbladder

Just below the stomach, organs known as the accessories of the digestive system, which are connected to the stomach by the digestive accessory ducts, assist in the process. The liver is a large organ on the right side of the abdomen that produces bile, a substance that helps in the digestion of fats. The pancreas is a small organ located behind the stomach that produces pancreatic juice, which contains enzymes that help in the digestion of food.

Layers of large intestine

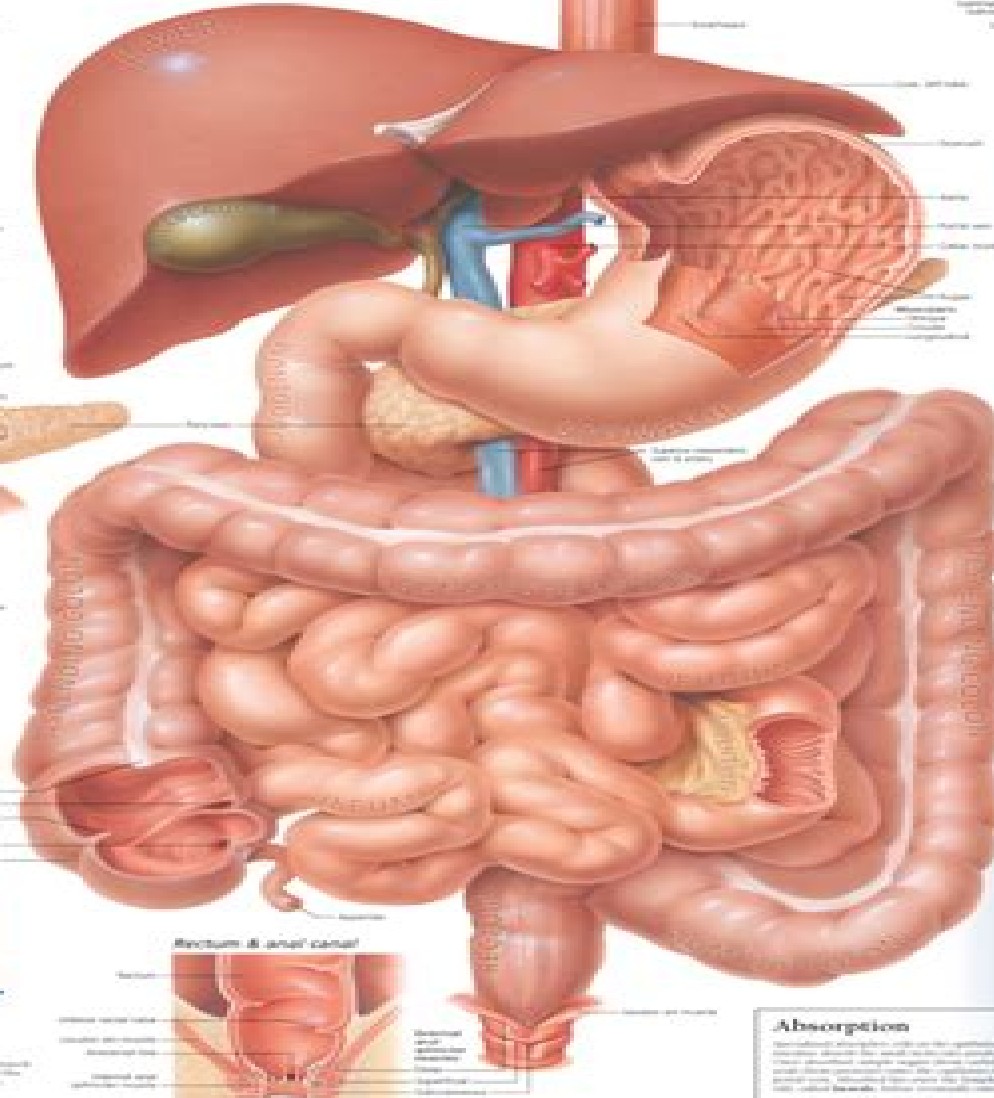

Large intestine

The large intestine consists of the cecum, the ascending colon, the transverse colon, the descending colon, and the sigmoid colon. It is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the remaining indigestible food matter, thereby forming feces.

Peristaltic action

Food material is pushed through the digestive system by a series of powerful, rhythmic contractions called peristalsis. These contractions are initiated by the enteric nervous system and the autonomic nervous system, which also control the rate at which the food moves through the system.

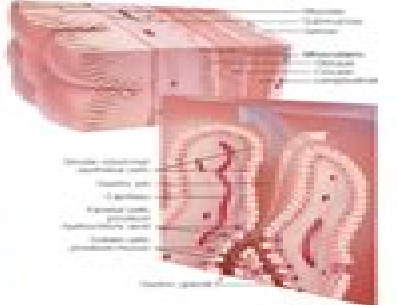

The mouth & salivary glands

Chewing, the mechanical action of the food, is called mastication. It begins in the mouth, where food is broken down into small pieces by the teeth. The tongue then moves the food into the esophagus, where the salivary glands, which secrete saliva, help in the digestion of food. Saliva contains the enzyme amylase, which begins the breakdown of carbohydrates into simpler sugars.

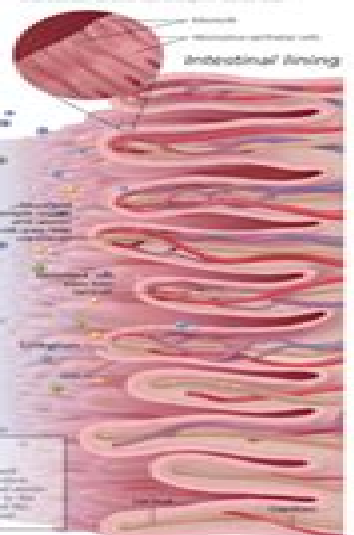

The stomach

The stomach is a large, muscular organ that is responsible for the digestion of food. It is located in the upper left part of the abdomen. Food enters the stomach through the esophagus and is broken down by the stomach's muscular walls. The stomach also secretes gastric juice, which contains the enzyme pepsin, to help in the digestion of proteins.

Small intestine

The small intestine consists of three parts: the duodenum, the jejunum, and the ileum. It is responsible for the digestion of food and the absorption of nutrients. The small intestine is highly coiled, which increases its surface area for absorption.

Absorption

The process of absorption is the transfer of nutrients from the small intestine into the bloodstream. This process occurs in the intestinal lining, which is composed of intestinal epithelial cells. These cells have small projections called microvilli that increase the surface area for absorption.
