Question 2

Suggested time—48 minutes.

(This question counts for one-third of the total essay section score.)

The following is an excerpt from science author Mary Roach's 2010 novel, Stuff Happens for Mom: The Curious Science of Life in the Void. Roach's unique perspective compels her to look at the unexpected, unsettling, and overlooked aspects of space travel. Read the passage carefully. Write an essay that analyzes the rhetorical choices Roach makes to convey her message to her audience.

- 1 To the naked scientist, you are a problem. You are the most intriguing piece of machinery he or she will ever have to deal with. You and your five-living-mechanism, four-pink-meaty, four-frame-thin, comes in a million different configurations. You are unpredictable. You're inconsistent. You take time to fix. The engineers must worry about the heat and oxygen and fluid you'll need in space, about how much you had to eat, what you can launch your stinky cocktail-and-mashed-potato sauce. A toilet will be a crucial feature in water and understanding. It does not matter on paper or felt or felt on how the mission commander. It has no ego, no emotional elements. Don't start to break down without gravity, and it would just flow without sleep.
- 2 To me, you are the best thing to happen to rocket science. The human being is the machine that makes the whole endeavor so endlessly intriguing. The task an organism where every human has evolved to keep in alive and thriving in a world with oxygen, gravity, and water, to suspend that organism in the vacuum of space for a month or a year, is a preposterous but captivating undertaking. Everything one takes for granted on Earth must be rethought, rehearsed, rehearsed — full-grown male and women astronauts, a chimpanzee dressed in a flight suit, and launched into orbit.
- 3 Welcome to space. Here the game you see on TV, the triumphs and the setbacks, but the stuff in between — the small comedies and everyday vicissitudes. What drew me to the topic of space exploration was not the
- 4 heroics and adventure stories, but the very human and sometimes absurd struggles behind them. The Apollo astronauts who worried that her personality was about to lose the moon race for the United States by showing up on the morning of his spacewalk, causing talk of taking it. On the first man in space, Yuri Gagarin, recalling that as he walked the red carpet before the Premier of the Central Committee of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union and a cheering crowd of thousands, he noticed that his stomach was upside and could think of nothing else.
- 5 At the end of the Apollo program, astronauts were interviewed to get their feedback on a range of topics. One of the questions: If an astronaut were to die outside the spacecraft during a spacewalk, what should you do? "Cut him loose," said one of the answers. All agreed: An attempt to recover the body could endanger other crew members' lives. Only a person who has experienced firsthand the not insignificant struggle of entering a space capsule in a pressurized suit could so philosophically state their words. Only someone who has drifted free in the uncharted reaches of the universe could understand that being in space, like the caller's fatal of you, looks not like space, but home.
- 6 In orbit, everything goes tumbling in the head. Shooting stars smack past below you, and the sun rises in the middle of the night. Space exploration is, in some ways an exploration of what it means to be human. How much heroism can people fudge? How long, long, and what does it do to them?
