The Paced Auditory Serial Addition Test (PASAT) as a Measure of Working Memory Raúl González, 2004 The Paced Auditory Serial Addition Task PASAT is a complex cognitive test sensitive to neuropsychological disorders Its traditional Total Correct score probably reflects multiple cognitive abilities but their relative importance remains undetermined Snyder et al 1993 modified scoring guidelines for the PASAT to give credit only for dyads This method emphasizes working memory and was found superior to Total Correct scores at detecting cognitive impairments in multiple sclerosis The current investigation provides psychometric and normative information for measures designed to capture specific abilities involved in PASAT performance and examines their utility in detecting neuropsychological impairment The major measures are intended to assess working memory Total Dyads and information processing speed average percent change in dyads with increasing stimulus presentation speed APCID Protocols from 500 neurologically intact adults were used to develop demographically corrected norms and to demonstrate reliability of the new scores Total Correct and Total Dyads in this group were highly correlated $r = 0.96$ Construct validity was examined by correlating PASAT measures with composite scores from other tests measuring four cognitive domains Total Dyads and Total Correct scores showed greatest association with the working memory composite whereas APCID scores were poorly correlated with all composite scores PASAT performance of a representative normal control group $n = 55$ was compared with results of clinical groups putatively at risk for working memory and processing speed dysfunction individuals with HIV infection $n = 62$ methamphetamine dependence $n = 71$ or both $n = 59$ The group with only HIV infection

performed significantly worse than controls on Total Dyads and Total Correct Both scores were moderately sensitive to overall neuropsychological impairment in the combined clinical groups and both were more sensitive than the WAIS 3 Letter Number Sequencing test an established measure of working memory A subset of participants underwent structural magnetic resonance brain imaging n 63 and evidenced modest correlations between frontal gray matter volume and Total Dyads Total Correct and APCID scores APCID scores also showed modest correlations with basal ganglia volume Based on these samples Total Dyads and Total Correct appear to be comparable measures that primarily reflect working memory United States Code United States,2018 Code of Federal Regulations ,2012 Special edition of the Federal register containing a codification of documents of general applicability and future effect as of April 1 with ancillaries
