Remembrance, Forgetting and Utterance Isha Dubey, 2025-12-08 This volume explores new avenues in the field of memory studies Going beyond Western frames of reference it shows how religion region caste and class and their intersectionality and the fraught legacy of colonialism shape acts of both collective remembrance and forgetting in South Asia The chapters in the volume call for a substantive rethinking of the conceptual and methodological frameworks in the field by posing critical questions such as how do these layers play into and inform the processes of crafting and curating national histories and memories in South Asia What are the silences that exist within it and how are they contested What are the alternative modes of remembering marking and accounting for difficult pasts beyond the confines of state regulated memorial projects And what events constitute dominant and rightful entry points for engaging with these themes and which remain ignored In doing so they steer discussions on the politics of memory in the region in directions that offer opportunities for not only re-visiting the Partition of 1947 from previously unexplored perspectives but also for going beyond it as the central analytical lens for approaching questions of remembrance forgetting and utterance in South Asia A radical new intervention the volume will be indispensable to scholars and researchers of history sociology and social anthropology politics and South Asian studies
