Section 2. Pennsylvania Act for Gradual Abolition of Slavery

And whereas the condition of those persons who have been thus discriminated against and students thereof, has been attended with circumstances which not only deprived them of the common advantages that they were by nature entitled to, but has cast them into the deepest afflictions that they were by nature entitled to behold and with those each other, and from their children, do injury the persons of which can only be corrected by supposing that we were in the same unhappy case. In justice, therefore, to the persons so unjustly discriminated, and their hopes, have no reasonable inducement to render that service to society which they otherwise might, and also in grateful commemoration of our own happy deliverance from that state of unconstitutional subjection to which we were reduced by the tyranny of Britain.

Be it enacted and it is hereby enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That on and after the first day of January next, the laws of the United States shall be the same within the limits of the United States as they were on and after the first day of January next.
