11.5 DBQ – JFK Brings Camelot Mystique to the White House

In the early 1960s, the United States was in the thick of the Cold War; during his term, President John F. Kennedy led the nation through its share of alarm and embarrassment. President Kennedy's foreign policy was ineffective in containing communism's global expansion but did facilitate some measure of US-Soviet disarmament. The failure at the Bay of Pigs invasion of Cuba, the inability of the US to contain Soviet advancement into the Western Hemisphere, and the incompetence of the Kennedy administration to firmly bargain with its Soviet counterpart Khrushchev all undermined United States foreign policy.

In 1961, the Kennedy administration sought to remove the communist Fidel Castro from power in Cuba; the Central Intelligence Agency trained an army of Cuban exiles and launched an invasion at the Bay of Pigs. However, because he did not want any evidence of American involvement, President Kennedy denied US air support; the Bay of Pigs invasion ended in catastrophe, with nearly all of the Cuban exiles killed or captured. Because of the "failed US attempt to invade Cuba," the Soviet Union "decided to install nuclear missiles inside Cuba" (Doc 8). The Kennedy administration's failure to effectively deal with Cuba led to strained tensions with the USSR and even the most alarming situation of the entire Cold War: the Cuban Missile Crisis.

1962 brought more potentially-disastrous events for the United States; for the first time, the Soviets had commenced in a "secret, swift, and extraordinary buildup of Communist missiles"
