

APUSH Notes:

Chapter 11: The Furnace of Civil War

Introduction:

I. Antislavery Plan

After the failure of the Fremont's Campaign, the Union then turned toward radical and adopted the Antislavery Plan, with its three components. First, the Union would liberate southern slaves by abolishing the concept of slavery. They would liberate the slaves, thereby crippling the very economic foundations of the Old South as the process. Third, they would end the Confederacy by taking control of the seceded Mississippi River. Fourth, the Union would strip the Confederacy to pieces by attacking targets the South's logistics and the Carolina. Fifth, they would demoralize the South by capturing the capital at Richmond and more. They would try everything to engage the enemy's main strength and spirit of its soldiers. This military plan was mostly developed by Winfield Scott and was well received by Confederacy.

II. Bull Run

The First Battle of Bull Run was the first major battle of the Civil War. At first, neither Union and the Confederacy expected a great battle and that would only last for merely days. A confident Union army, expecting a quick and easy victory, marched on toward the smaller Confederate army at Bull Run. However, when "Bull Run" Johnston's soldiers found that it was well (because the soldiers) and Confederacy reinforcements arrived unexpectedly, the Union army was then driven back and the Union fled from battle. This victory for the South gave them an over-confident attitude that caused many Southerners to believe in defeat. The North, on the other hand, were then driven up from the thinking of a spontaneous victory, allowing the Union to independently prepare for the conflict that lay ahead.

III. Peninsula Campaign
