

France during the Revolution

Lesson Objectives:

To determine whether the National Convention made positive changes to France during the French Revolution.

The French people were really happy that Louis XVI was no longer in charge of the country. Between 1789 and 1793, France changed a lot. This was mainly because it had three governments:

- The National Assembly 1789- 92
- The Convention 1792-93
- The Committee of Public Safety 1793

There were three different types of government because people did not know which would run the country in the best way.

The new governments all wanted to make life better for the French people and they made some very important changes:

- Noble families had all their privileges taken away and were not allowed coats of arms.
- Judges were no longer allowed to buy their jobs but were elected by the people.
- New paper money was printed called 'assignats'.
- Church land was taken away from the Catholics and sold.
- Members of the Church were controlled by the government.

A New Constitution

The biggest changes in France were that many people could now vote for the first time and a new constitution was created.

A constitution is a set of rules that say how a country will be run. It helped to control the King. This meant that Louis XVI could no longer be an absolute monarch.

- You have been asked to write a constitution for the classroom. This is a list of rules that will help you enjoy learning more.
