

Short Answer Questions

Question 1

Organizations pursuing change take the business environment into account as they seek to gain or enhance effective business performance. But is being aware and reacting to an environment controlling change?

- 1. It is not because organizations are important environmental questions to which they react, and not what they do. The business world is increasingly being governed by technology, markets, and strategic decisions to identify new customers and markets and "new market" opportunities and business systems.
- 2. It is not because not all organizations are in business situations. Some are heavily regulated and controlled, while others are privately owned. It should be recognized that many are self-governing organizations.
- 3. The business environment is not an organization with explicit, defined, and measurable business, the way organizations and individuals are. It is not a business organization.
