Using the SDGs as a case study this book addresses a key gap in our understanding of the role of evidence in contemporary international policy making. It is structured around three overarching questions: 1. how does scientific evidence influence multilateral policy development within the UN General Assembly? 2. how did evidence shape the goals and targets that constitute the SDGs? and 3. how did institutional arrangements and non-state actor engagements mediate the evidence to policy process in the development of the SDGs? The ultimate intention is to tease out lessons on global policy making and to understand the influence of different evidence inputs and institutional factors in shaping outcomes. To understand the value afforded to scientific evidence within multilateral deliberation, a conceptual framework is provided drawing upon literature from policy studies and political science, including recent theories of evidence-informed policy making and new institutionalism. It posits that the success or failure of evidence informing global political processes rests upon the representation and access of scientific stakeholders, levels of community organisation, the framing and presentation of evidence, and time, including the duration over which evidence and key conceptual ideas are presented. Cutting across the discussion is the fundamental question of whose evidence counts and how expertise is defined. The framework is tested with specific reference to three themes that were prominent during the SDG negotiation process: public health articulated in SDG 3, urban sustainability articulated in SDG 11, and data and information systems, which were a cross-cutting theme of the dialogue. Within each scientific community, specific demands and through an exploration of key literature, including evidence inputs and UN documentation, as well as through key informant interviews, the translation of these scientific ideas into policy priorities is uncovered. The intended audiences of this book include academic practitioners studying evidence to policy processes, multilateral negotiation, and/or UN policy planning. The book also intends to provide useful insights for policy makers, including UN diplomats, officials, and staff working to improve the quality of evidence communication and uptake within multilateral institutions. Finally, it aims to support the whole global academic and scientific community, including students of public policy and political science, by providing insights on how to input into influence and even shape international evidence-informed policy making.

Academia Inc. Jamie Brownlee, 2015-05-01T00:00:00Z. Canadian universities are being slowly but inexorably corporatized. Casualizing academic labour, remaking students into consumers of education, implementing corporate management models, and commercializing academic research all point to the ascendance of business interests and values in Canada's higher education system. Academia Inc. examines the tensions that result from the merging of two fundamentally incompatible institutions: the university and the corporation. Brownlee argues that moving from liberal education to corporate job training, public service to profit making, and critical research to commercial invention radically undermines the goals of higher education. Investigating the history, causes, and impacts of corporatization, this book explores how this transformation has taken shape and its ramifications for both universities and society as a whole. Brownlee suggests several strategies for resisting this process.
