

Plowden's endorsement of good practice

- In both its title and opening words the Plowden Report declared its child-centred philosophy, which its authors believed was synonymous with 'good' primary practice. Thus the Report serves as both a description and endorsement of child-centred approaches to the education of young children.
- The Committee's justification for this standpoint was that they believed child-centred approaches were the most effective means of achieving the aim of responding to the individual needs of pupils that had first been aired in the Hadow Reports, but had (the Committee believed) been undermined by the particular educational practices that resulted from the 1944 Education Act. The Report presented its interpretation of 'good' primary practice to respond to popular concerns that primary education had no clearly articulated or shared philosophy, and was consequently being adversely 'overshadowed' by debates about secondary education.
- 'In the past many primary schools have 'worked' to the 11+. If it has not been their Bible, it has often been a taskmaster. It sets up minimum standards for the abler children, often in our view the wrong ones, and distorting in their efforts on the curriculum. But at least they were standards. The teachers and parents had some yardstick by which to measure their pupils' work. Now it is going, how are they to know what to expect of children? These are among the problems we discuss.'
- (CACE, 1967: p. 2)

The Death of Progressive Education Roy Lowe, 2007-08-07 The first authoritative survey of the changing politics of the classroom since the Second World War It charts the process by which society moved away from being one in which teachers decided both the content of the school curriculum and how it would be taught towards the present situation in which a host of external influences dictate the nature of the educational experience The book identifies the key social and political developments which made this transformation inevitable and at the same time raises the question of how far the loss of control by teachers has also meant a shift away from progressive child centred education Key issues covered include The post war debate on the school curriculum as well as the extent to which it was fiercely contested The Black Paper Movement of the early 1970s The ways in which radical right rhetoric has come to dominate the politics of education and the educational press How the term progressive education has been subtly reworked so that those claiming to reform education now focus on measurable outcomes and the answerability of schools to parental and government pressure An historical analysis of the ways in which the Thatcher revolution in schools has been taken forward and developed under both John Major and Tony Blair This ground breaking analysis of how we have arrived at the present situation in our schools will be of interest to all students of education and to all those who wish to learn more about the changes that have taken place in our education system over the past sixty years It helps us understand why they happened and in so doing raises profound questions about the aspirations of modern society and the role of the schools in shaping it
