Physical reality, you will immediately agree, must be a thing, independent of and distinct from anything that we think, will or feel. It is independent of what we imagine, in fact, because it is the ground of having a consciousness of it. It is the ground, even if we suppose consciousness to arise in the brain, of that consciousness. What's interesting about this fact about consciousness is that it is not just a fact about consciousness, but a fact about reality. It is a fact about reality, and it is a fact about reality that we can know.
