

Three-Point Essay

Anyone can write an essay. One formula for writing an essay is the three-point format:

1. First Paragraph-Introduction
 - a. A statement to arouse interest of reader.
 - b. A general statement called a thesis statement that makes an assertion about the subject.
 - c. Three ways in which you will explain or prove your thesis statement.
2. Second Paragraph-Point #1
3. Third Paragraph-Point #2
4. Fourth Paragraph-Point #3
5. Fifth Paragraph-Conclusion
 - a. Review thesis with emphasis, summarization.
 - b. Remind reader of your three main points/arguments.
 - c. Suggest a course of action, offer a possible solution.
 - d. Issue a well-known quote, give a personal remark or opinion.

Body of essay: developing, support, verification, various details of the three topics, using reasons, examples, facts, etc.

Examples of Introductory Paragraphs (Thesis statements are underlined)

1. The killing has become one of the nation's leading crimes. Massachusetts officials must take action to prevent shootings. The most effective methods include the use of firearms, hidden cameras, and door guards.
2. What do the names Luthansen Line, Turkey Tracks, Dresden Place, and Double Wedding Ring all have in common? They are all names of quiltsquares. Quilting is a traditional craft which is appreciated as an artistic talent in America. Many men and women are eager to learn the art of quilting because a quilt is a beautiful creative project, a quilt is practical, and the process of quilting brings people together.
3. "There is more than one way to burn a book," says Ray Bradbury, author of the best seller Fahrenheit 451, and an avid combiner of book censorship. Censorship is one of the most common problems faced by libraries today. This attempt to "purify" common reading material misrepresents the author of a book, takes strength away from his characterizations, and, ultimately, can dull literary techniques and styles so a point whereby readers will be unable to distinguish one author from another.
4. Citizens of Murfreesboro spend their leisure time in many ways. One of the most popular ways is watching Junior the basketball. Many people believe this program is a complete waste of time and money and believe the program should be abolished. In contrast, the Junior the basketball has so many advantages that it should never be abolished. The program brings a family closer together, it gives the people of the town something to go on a Saturday, and it gives a young child the chance to develop into a good athlete.
5. "To be or not to be?"—is that the question? Is it if one enjoys being an actor. Participation in dramatic productions adds spice to life. Acting on stage and working in productions gives one a chance to improve himself, others a true knowledge of theater, and shows an opportunity to meet different kinds of people.
