

Lessons to Learn

She runs down the court. A bead of sweat rolls down her face. To her, this is the feeling of hard work. Many valuable lessons can be learned through sports that may dramatically help a teenager. Work ethic, responsibility, teamwork, leadership, passion, success, and failure: all of these can be learned through sports and used in various ways throughout the athlete's life.

Sports promote work ethic. In sports, there is practice on every week day, and possibly some on weekends. This shows the athletes that nothing comes easy; it takes hard work and dedication. Practice makes perfect. This is also true in the classroom. In order to get good grades and a full education, hard work must be applied.

Responsibility is a key factor in school and sports. Sports require an athlete to be responsible and attend all practices. If an injury occurs, the athlete must be responsible enough to inform the coach and take the proper steps for a full recovery. In the classroom, responsibility is also important. A student must do all assignments correctly and turn them in on time. If the student does not understand an assignment, it
