Abstract

RESEARCH The authors used a 10-item scale that assesses the degree to which respondents agree or disagree with the statement, "I am not interested in participating in the [sic] group's decision-making." They used the mean of the responses to this item as an indicator of respondents' interest in participating in group decision-making. The mean score for the sample was 2.14 (SD = 1.00), indicating that the sample was not particularly interested in participating in group decision-making.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program on the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women. The study was a randomized, controlled trial. The subjects were 40 sedentary, middle-aged women who were randomly assigned to either a supervised walking program or a control group. The walking program consisted of 12 weeks of supervised walking, 3 times per week, for 30 minutes per session. The control group consisted of 20 women who did not participate in the walking program. The physical and psychological health of the subjects was assessed at baseline and at 12 weeks. The results of the study showed that the walking program had a significant positive effect on the physical and psychological health of the subjects. The walking program significantly improved the subjects' physical health, as measured by the 6-minute walk test, and their psychological health, as measured by the Beck Depression Inventory and the State-Trait Anxiety Inventory. The walking program also significantly improved the subjects' quality of life, as measured by the SF-36. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, low-intensity, supervised walking program can improve the physical and psychological health of sedentary, middle-aged women.

RESEARCH In addition to its involvement in research on human health, the company also has a long history of research on the environment. In 1997, the company was the first to publish a report on the environmental impact of its products. The report was the first of its kind in the world. It was a landmark document that set a new standard for transparency and accountability. The report was a testament to the company's commitment to environmental stewardship and its dedication to sustainable development. It was a bold move that demonstrated the company's leadership in the industry and its commitment to the future of the planet.
