Abstract: This study aims to investigate the impact of digital marketing on the sales performance of small and medium-sized enterprises (SMEs) in the retail sector. The research focuses on the adoption and usage of digital marketing strategies, such as social media, email marketing, and search engine optimization (SEO), and their relationship to sales growth and customer engagement. The study uses a quantitative approach, collecting data from a sample of 100 SMEs through a survey. The results show that digital marketing adoption is positively correlated with sales performance, with a significant increase in sales growth observed for SMEs that actively use digital marketing strategies. The findings suggest that digital marketing is a crucial tool for SMEs to enhance their sales performance and compete effectively in the market.
