Flesh and Blood Susan E. Lederer,2008-04-24 Organ transplantation is one of the most dramatic interventions in modern medicine Since the 1950s thousands of people have lived with new hearts kidneys lungs corneas and other organs and tissues transplanted into their bodies From the beginning though there was simply a problem surgeons often encountered shortages of people willing and able to give their organs and tissues To overcome this problem they often brokered financial arrangements Yet an ethic of gift exchange coexisted with the commodification of the body The same duality characterized the field of blood transfusion which was essential to the development of modern surgery This book will be the first to bring together the histories of blood transfusion and organ transplantation It will show how these two fields redrew the lines between self and non self the living and the dead and humans and animals Drawing on newspapers magazines legal cases films and the papers and correspondence of physicians and surgeons Lederer will challenge the assumptions of some bioethicists and policymakers that popular fears about organ transplantation necessarily reflect timeless human concerns and preoccupations with the body She will show how notions of the body intact in parts living and dead are shaped by the particular culture in which they are embedded

Stations in the Field Raf De Bont,2015-03-20 Modern zoological research aims to study the animal in its own dwelling place Otto Zacharias a German plankton specialist and former science journalist made this claim in 1905 More than hundred years later it might sound surprising When we think of sites of animal research that symbolize modernity the first places that come to mind are not to use Zacharias's example the parts of inland lakes favored by freshwater plankton. The period around 1900 after all witnessed the rise of grand urban research institutes that housed industrial type laboratories filled with mercury pumps, new fangled microscopes, galvanometers, electric centrifuges, gas motors and spectrometers. Yet Zacharias belonged to a group of zoologists who were establishing a novel way of studying nature in the field. They developed what ecologists today describe as place based research. It focuses on complex systems of interacting organisms usually through studies over long periods of time in a natural field context. This was a modern approach and as such it needed modern infrastructure, the field station. Beginning in the 1870s a growing number of biological field stations were founded first in Europe and later elsewhere around the world. Thousands of zoologists received their training and performed their research at these sites. By revealing the intricate activities that enabled them to perform science in the animal's dwelling place, Raf de Bont is the first to give this history of how life scientists were brought closer to living nature.
