instance and South Korea's Samsung provides the iPhone's semiconductor chips and retina displays. Drawing on extensive interviews with top executives and senior government officials, Yeung argues that since the late 1980s many East Asian firms have outgrown their home states and are no longer dependent on state support; as a result, the developmental state has lost much of its capacity to steer and direct industrialization. We cannot read the performance of national firms as a direct outcome of state action. Yeung calls for a thorough renovation of the still dominant view that states are the primary engine of industrial transformation. He stresses action by national firms and traces various global production networks to incorporate both firm-specific activities and the international political economy. He identifies two sets of dynamics in these national/global articulations known as strategic coupling/coevolution in the confluence of state/firm and global production networks and the various strategies pursued by East Asian firms to attain competitive positions in the global marketplace. Rosen's
