Magnetic Resonance Detection of Explosives and Illicit Materials Tomaž Apih, Bulat Rameev, Georgy Mozzhukhin, Jamie Barras, 2013-10-02 Detection of concealed explosives is a notoriously difficult problem and many different approaches have been proposed to solve this problem Nuclear quadrupole resonance NQR is unique in many ways It operates in a safe AM radio frequency range and it can remotely detect unique fingerprint NQR spectrum of many explosives such as TNT or RDX As such the detection of target does not depend on the shape or material of the container or the presence of metallic object such as triggers etc Spectra of chemically similar compounds differ enough that their presence never causes interference or false alarms Unfortunately widespread use is prevented due to low sensitivity radiofrequency interference from the noisy environment and inability to detect liquid explosives This book presents current state of the art of the attempts to overcome NQR sensitivity problem either by increasing the strengths of signals generated or by increasing the specificity of the technique through a better understanding of the factors that affect the quadrupolar parameters of specific explosives The use of these specific quadrupolar parameters is demonstrated on signal processing techniques that can detect weak signals which are hidden in a noisy background The problem of differentiation of liquid explosives and benign liquids in closed containers is approached by measurements of different nuclear magnetic resonance NMR parameters As shown a couple of solutions has reached a prototype stage and could find their use in a near future
