THE UNITED STATES MUSTERS ITS FORCES (Pages 550–551)

How did the United States try to stay out of war but be prepared?

According to the Neutrality Acts, the United States could not enter the war in Europe. However, President Roosevelt asked for a change in the Acts. He suggested a cash-and-carry provision. Such a provision would allow Britain and France to buy and transport American arms. Congress passed this new Neutrality Act in November 1939.

In 1940, Germany, Italy, and Japan signed a mutual defense treaty. They became the Axis powers. The treaty meant that if the United States went to war against any one of them, all three would fight. That would put America at war on two fronts: in Europe and in Asia. Nevertheless, Roosevelt gave the British “all aid short of war” to help them fight Hitler.

Roosevelt assured the nation that the United States would stay out of war. But he prepared for war. Congress increased spending for national defense. It passed the nation’s first peacetime draft in September 1940.

FDR broke the tradition of a two-term presidency and ran for re-election in 1940. His opponent, Wendell Willkie, shared Roosevelt’s beliefs that the United States should help Britain, but that it should not get involved in war. Voters chose the candidate they knew. FDR won a third term.
