

The Digestive System

What is the digestive system?

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is a tract of organs that is responsible for digesting and absorbing nutrients from food. Food enters through the mouth, is broken down in the stomach, and then moves through the small intestine, where nutrients are absorbed. The digestive system also includes accessory organs that help in the process, such as the liver, pancreas, and gallbladder.

Liver, pancreas & gallbladder

After leaving the stomach, digested material enters the duodenum, the first part of the small intestine, which is connected to the stomach by the duodenal papilla. The pancreas, which is a small organ in the abdominal cavity, produces the enzyme pancreatic juice that is secreted into the duodenum. The gallbladder, a small sac-like organ, stores bile produced by the liver. Bile is secreted into the duodenum to help in the digestion of fats.

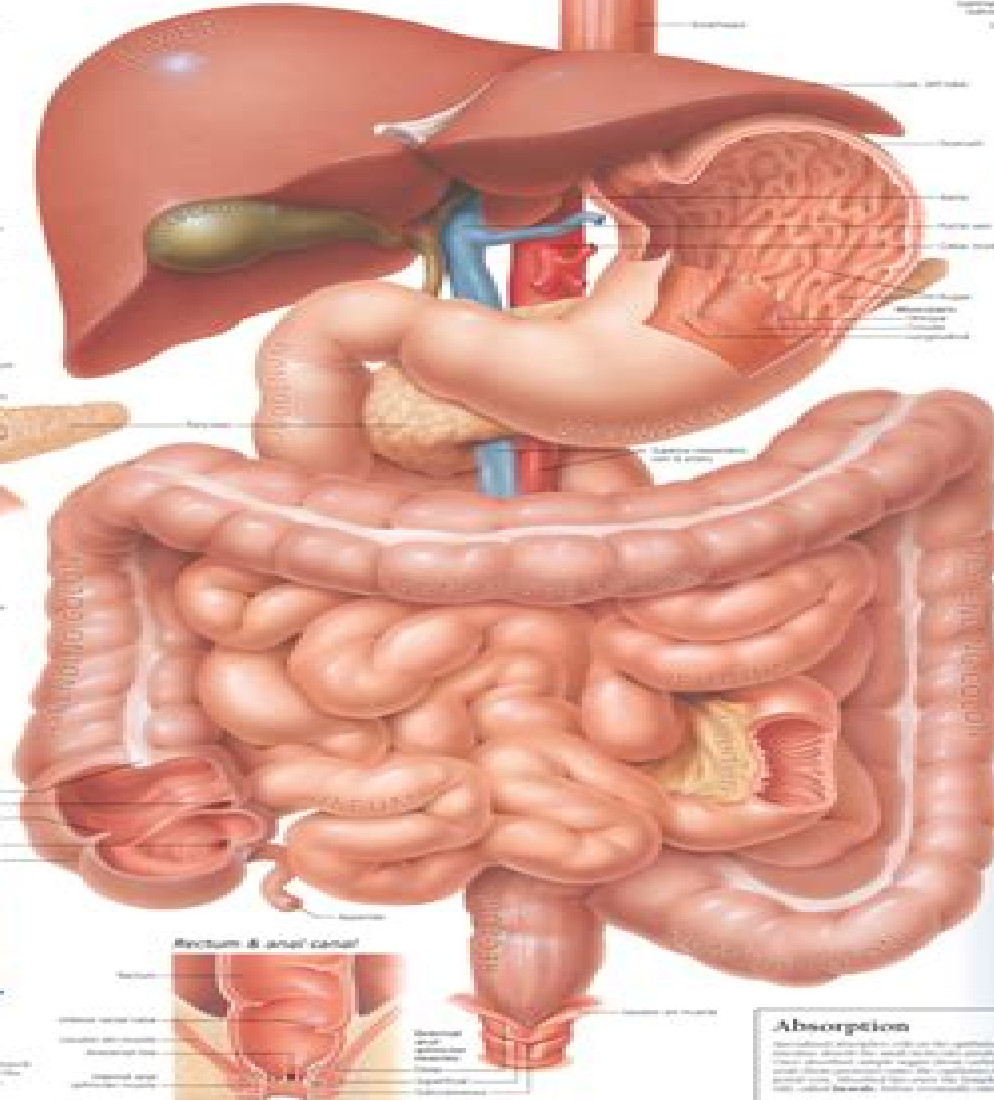

Large intestine
The large intestine consists of the cecum, the appendix, the ascending colon, the transverse colon, the descending colon, and the sigmoid colon. It is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the undigested material, forming the feces.

Peristaltic action

Food material is pushed through the digestive system by a series of powerful muscular contractions called peristalsis. These contractions are initiated by the enteric nervous system and the autonomic nervous system, which also control the release of digestive enzymes.

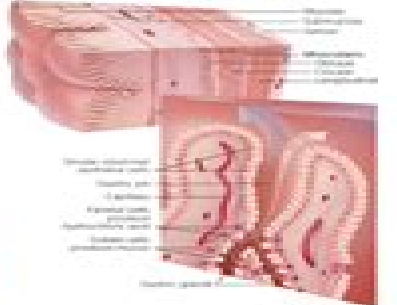

The mouth & salivary glands

Chewing, the mechanical action of the food, is called mastication. It begins in the mouth, where food is broken down into small pieces by the teeth. Saliva, produced by the salivary glands, moistens the food and helps in the digestion of carbohydrates. The salivary glands are located in the mouth and produce saliva, which contains the enzyme amylase that begins the digestion of starches.

The stomach

The stomach is a large, muscular organ that is responsible for the digestion of food. It receives food from the esophagus and churns it into a thick, soupy mass called chyme. The stomach wall is composed of several layers, including the mucosa, submucosa, muscularis, and serosa. The mucosa is the innermost layer and is responsible for the production of gastric juice, which contains the enzyme hydrochloric acid that helps in the digestion of proteins.

Small intestine

The small intestine is a long, coiled organ that is responsible for the digestion of food. It receives chyme from the stomach and moves it through its three parts: the duodenum, jejunum, and ileum. The small intestine is covered in a network of blood vessels called capillaries, which absorb the nutrients from the digested food.

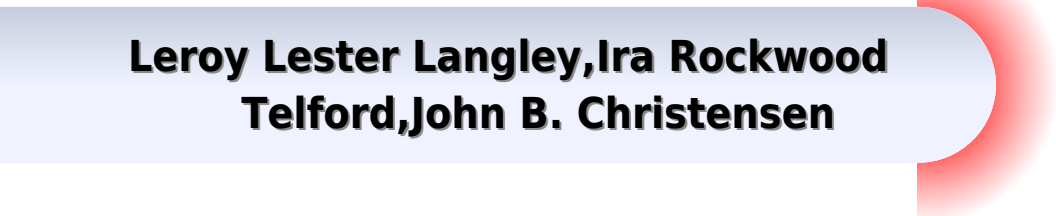

Absorption

The absorption of nutrients occurs in the small intestine. The nutrients are absorbed through the capillaries and lymphatic vessels in the intestinal wall. The capillaries absorb the water-soluble nutrients, while the lymphatic vessels absorb the fat-soluble nutrients. The absorbed nutrients are then transported to the liver for further processing.
