

The Digestive System

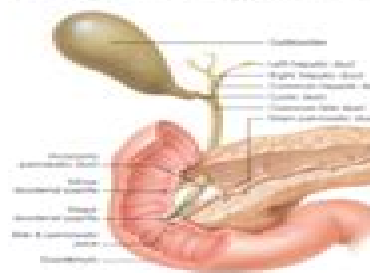

What is the digestive system?

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is a tract of organs that is responsible for digesting and absorbing nutrients from food. Food enters through the mouth, is broken down in the stomach, and then moves through the small intestine, where nutrients are absorbed. The digestive system also includes accessory organs that help in the process, such as the liver, pancreas, and gallbladder.

Liver, pancreas & gallbladder

After leaving the stomach, digested material enters the duodenum, the first part of the small intestine, where it is mixed with bile secreted by the gallbladder. This bile is a strong agent on the material within the duodenum, causing it to move forward. The pancreas, this organ is a strong agent on the material within the duodenum, causing it to move forward. The gallbladder stores bile in its sac, which is called the gallbladder.

Layers of large intestine

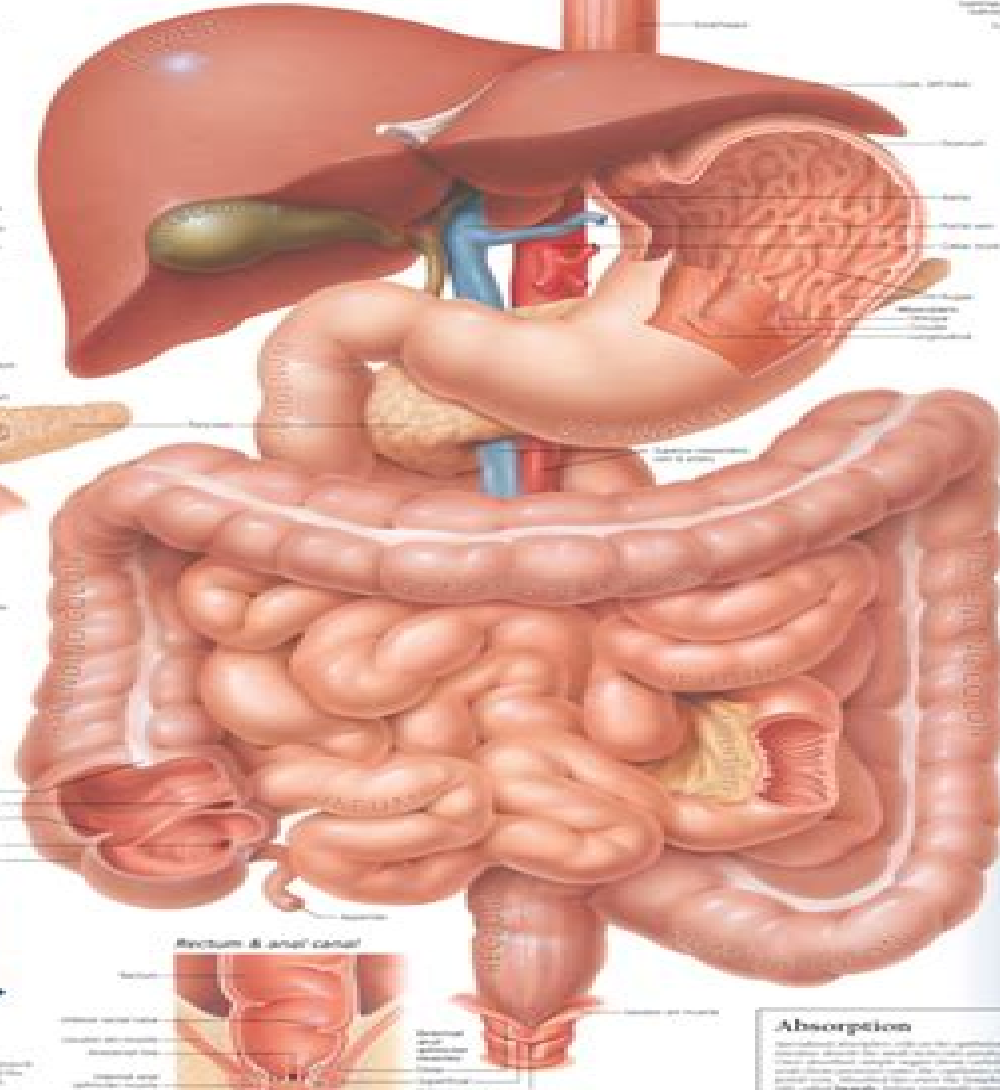

Large intestine

The large intestine consists of the cecum, the appendix, the ascending colon, the transverse colon, the descending colon, the sigmoid colon, and the rectum. The large intestine is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the material that enters it. The large intestine is also responsible for the formation of feces.

Peristaltic action

Food material is pushed through the digestive system by a series of powerful muscular contractions called peristalsis. These contractions move the material forward and the food is then, when the stomach has relaxed.

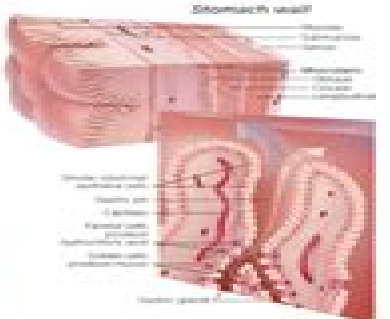

The mouth & salivary glands

Chewing the food breaks it into smaller pieces, making it easier to swallow. The salivary glands in the mouth produce saliva, which is mixed with the food to form a bolus. The bolus is then swallowed and moves down the esophagus. The salivary glands also produce enzymes that help in the digestion of food.

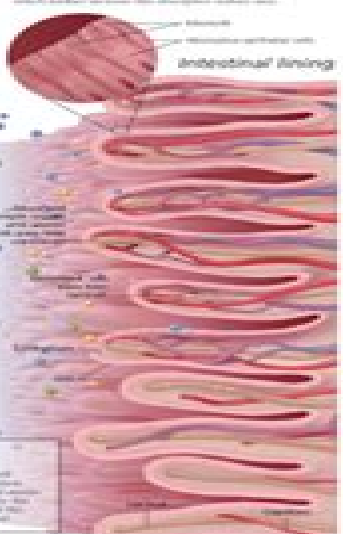

The stomach

The stomach is a large, muscular organ that is responsible for the digestion of food. It is located in the upper left part of the abdomen. The stomach has a thick wall and is capable of contracting and relaxing to move food through it. The stomach also produces gastric juice, which is used to break down food.

Small intestine

The small intestine is a long, coiled tube that is responsible for the digestion of food. It is located in the lower right part of the abdomen. The small intestine has a thin wall and is capable of contracting and relaxing to move food through it. The small intestine also produces intestinal juice, which is used to break down food.

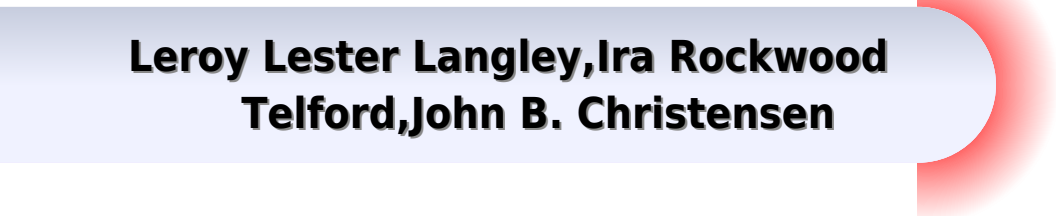

Absorption

The small intestine is responsible for the absorption of nutrients from the food. The nutrients are absorbed into the blood and lymphatic system. The large intestine is responsible for the absorption of water and electrolytes from the material that enters it. The large intestine is also responsible for the formation of feces.
