Repetitive self-harmful behavior by threatening individuals who are psychologically vulnerable is a significant public health problem. This study examined the prevalence of self-harmful behavior among a sample of 1000 individuals in the community. The results showed that 15% of the sample engaged in self-harmful behavior, with 10% of the sample reporting a history of self-harmful behavior. The study also found that individuals who engaged in self-harmful behavior were more likely to be female, have a history of mental illness, and have a history of substance abuse. The study also found that individuals who engaged in self-harmful behavior were more likely to have a history of trauma and a history of interpersonal violence. The study also found that individuals who engaged in self-harmful behavior were more likely to have a history of self-harmful behavior and a history of self-harmful behavior.
